In many environments with high safety requirements, it is not possible for clients/patients to independently choose hygiene products because institutions must relate to the fact that some hygiene products may constitute a safety risk, and therefore not permitted. Evidence-based Design, EBD, shows that self-determination reduces stress, which can reduce aggression and promote healing. Autonomy has been shown to have a positive impact on well-being and contribute to healing. It is therefore important to create a life and environments with good conditions for self-determination with the help of architecture, interior design and products.
